The Dargah situated at Ghousganj, in western Pakistan, is a rich pilgrimage site, where masses of Hindus and Muslims believe that Shah Daraz Khan is an incarnation of Lord Vishnu. Sympathisers of the Taliban see this leader as an incarnation of Islam who will free Muslims from the persecution of the West and give victory to Islam. But the majority of Pakistanis believe that he is a terrorist. Reverence for his shrine has spread far and wide, including a visit to the site by Taliban leader Mohammad Omar. The group consider him the founder of the TTP, and hold him in great esteem. After Daraz Khan's death in January, the Dargah was split into two. A Dargah for those who believe Daraz Khan is a manifestation of the Lord Vishnu, and a Dargah for those who believe that he is a manifestation of the Lord Shiva. Islamists 'protect' the shrine from interference. In early May, a Pakistani official said that the Pakistani Taliban were behind the attack on the shrine, because they believed that India was trying to influence the worship of the dargah. The Reuters news agency quoted a Pakistani government spokesman, when he said that the attackers appeared to be working on behalf of the TTP, an affiliate of the Taliban movement, an international terrorist organisation. He said that the TTP had "claimed responsibility for the attack". image copyright AFP image caption Friday prayers at the shrine in its new location On Wednesday, a man named Farooq, told Reuters that the attack was carried out by members of the TTP and the Jamaat-ul-Ahrar faction of the TTP. The attack has been blamed on a group called Tehrik-e-Taliban Pakistan (TTP), an affiliate of the Taliban movement, which is considered a terrorist organisation by both the United States and the UN. However, analysts have also said that the attack is in some way a reflection of the often volatile relations between the two countries. 82157476af
